PUBLIC OPINION.

The Democracy has a mind to take the stout aggressive in this State this fall. It has a great deal to tell the people and talk over with them, and it cannot begun the task too soon.—(Utica Observer (Dem.) Wait a little. More honorable than any victory would it be for New-York Republicans to be able to send word to the President on his bed of suffering that their differ-ences were reconciled, that in their love, respect and sympathy for him they had become a unit.—(Kingston Freeman (Rep.)

THE CJTLOOK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

THE C.TRLOOK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

From The Philadelphia Press (Rep.)

The outlook for the campaign in Pennsylvania is auspictous. The distrust of the spring has given way to the full confidence of midsumer. All the signs are propitious and all the influences are ripening a brilliant success. Political antagouisms are mellowed and subdued. Men of all parties feel that the Administration represents stability, security and hope. They will recoil from any act which would be a blow to its beneficent work, and, on the contrary, will strengthen it with patriotic support. With a good ticket, the Republicans of Pennsylvania will carry the State.

MORE ANXIOUS FOR APPROPRIATIONS THAN STATE RIGHTS.

Prom The New-Orleans Times (Dem.)

There is no doubt that the Southern people are gradually but surely losing their respect and adiantation for the doctine of State Rights. In their desire to hasten the development of their material resources, and to secure the weath and prosperity to which the advantages of their section ontitle them, they do not permit themselves to be embarrassed by State lines. They recognize the fact, and accept it, that the functions of the National Government are being gradually enlarged, and that the sphere of State Government's becoming more and more limited. The States bordering on the Mississippi River are more than willing that the National Government shall build their levees and keep them in repair. It is deabtful if there is a respectable minority in any Southern State that would oppose the education of the negroes at the expense of the National Treasury. Indeed, National interference is welcomed rather than repelled wherever such interference promises to help to advance the South's prosperity. There is, of course, a good deal of the old feeling about the rights and dignity of a sovereign State yet in existence, but it is safe to say there is no marked feeling of repugnance to a strong central government. THE COMING CANVASS.

THE COMING CANVASS.

From The Syracuse Journal (Rep.)

The Republican party of this State is not divided; the heartburnings caused by the severe centest at Albany are rapidly disappearing; the results of that contest are accepted as wise and proper ones, and such is the good discipline and the innate spirit of the Republicans of this State that, in order that disaster shall not come from that cause, they will put forth extraordinary efforts to overcome any drawbacks that might tend in that direction. The shaping of the State ticket can as yet be only a matter of conjecture. The present State officers are understood to be candidates for renomination, except that Controller Wadsworth seeks a seat in Congress, instead of another term as Controller. There are good arguments both in favor of renominating the old ticket and of a new distribution of the candidates. It is, perhaps, too early to determine just what is best and politic. The only question of serious importance is as to what ticket will command the heartiest support and have the best chance of success.

GOOD PRICES FOR SHORTHORN CATTLE.

LEXINGTON, Ky., July 27 .- The sale of Shorthorn cattle selected from the Flat Creek herd, the property of the Hamiltons, of Mt. Sterling, took place to-day at the farm of B. F. Vanmeter, four miles from Winches rte, and was largely sttended, all the stock raising States being represented. The herd comprised many deseendants of noted families of Shorthorns, among them Miss Peachblossom, Miss Duchess of Kings Cote, imported Loo Bell, imported Ruby Duchess, imported Rose of Sharon, representing Kurtlevington blood, imported Young Mary, imported Phyllis and others. The Kurtlevingtons and Loo Bells excited the livelest competition, while others sold at good prices. Eight bulls brought an average of $600 35; eighteen Josephines, an average of $60 35; eighteen Josephines, an average of $466; seven young Phyllises, an average of $46 65; seven young Fayllises, an average of $46 65; seven young Marys, an average of $46 70; and ten young Marys, an average of $42 20.

CHARITIES AND CORRECTION.

Boston, July 27.-At to-day's session of the Sational Conference of Charities and Correction the opening hour was devoted to the reading of reports from various States, all of which showed an improved condidon of the charitable institutions. Legislation upon the ubject of immigration of criminals and paupers into the United States was a question which evoked considerable discussion, it being asserted that pauper immigration is already in progress in the West, that certain countries in Europe have made organized shipments to this country, and that Canada had also made many shipments here. There was some opposition to National legislation on this subject, and the entire session was devoted to the dis-

WESTERN NAIL ASSOCIATION.

PITT DURG, Penn., July 27.-There was a sell-attended meeting of the Western Nail Association here to-day. A general discussion developed the fact hat the stocks everywhere were unusually light. The Wheeling mills reported that they were never so lightly stocked, and that the demand was unusually good. A resolution was adopted reaffirming the rates adopted at the meeting of June 15; that is, a $2.75 selling rate, subject to no discount except 2 per cent for cash. The outlook, it is stated, is an unusually bright one for the trade; little or no speculation is indulged in, and the demand is considered a legitimate and healthy one.

DIED WITHOUT MAKING HIS WILL.

BRISTOL, PENN., July 27 .- Joseph Carlton, birth, was recently employed as a wool-sorter in one of the mills here. He died on Sunday last from typhold fever. He had accumulated the sum of $800, and by his death it is left to the State. The deceased man had no relatives in this country. He showed a disposition to make a will, but the physicians told him that the next day would be soon enough. The poor fellow died the same day.

The time comes at last when the fag is insupportable, and there is positive virtue in a vacation. When appetite is gone; when work has ceased to be lovable | no fuss in it. for its own sake, and becomes what Mr. Mantilini called "a dem'd horrid grind"; when one is tired of seeing the doctor, of spending money with the apothecary, and of testing the medicaments recommended by good-natured friends, there is nothing for it but to pack the portmanteau and to abscond. People with nothing the matter with them in particular who can do this every year without any cal culation of expense, and who can easily shift their country quarters should they prove untasteful, cannot know how much calculation enters, or should enter, into the plans of those whose time and whose purses his limited. Very much depends upon the choice of a place for the all too short retreat, and any mistake of air, of company and of accommodations may have serious results, especially when there is a question of health. I did not come to the Delaware Water Gap of my wn motion, for I knew nothing about it; but I was told that I should find here good mountain air, fine scenery, a plenty of pleasant and reinvigorating walks, an excellent hotel unspoiled by the folderol of fashion, and a liberty of perfect idleness, which was precisely what I wanted. If I break through the law of laziness which I had prescribed for myself, or which, more correctly speaking, was prescribed for me, and resume my acquaintance with pen and ink, it is because there is a pleasure in laboring here after a limited and amateur fashion. It seems almost a shame to make no record of so much pure and innocent happiness, and to do noth ing to tempt my fagged and jaded fellow-creatures to share in the enjoyments and benefits of this superior, literally superior, spot. Most people have heard carelessly that the Delaware Water Gap is charming; but nobody can theroughly understand how charming it is until they have felt its invigorating breezes fan their feverish cheeks, have slept the unbroken sleep which here is possible, have climbed these rugged paths, with exquisite views continually and unexpectedly breaking upon the eyes, and have floated between the majestic mountains over the dark, unruffled bosom of the river.

I suppose it is hardly necessary for me to inform my readers where or what the Water Gap is; but for the benefit of the few who have never heard of it I may venture upon a few particulars. It is where the Delaware River crosses the Blue Ridge. For one hundred and fifty miles the stream has been a rapid one, but upon reaching the Water Gap it becomes solemn, slow and circumspect, and creeps through the great crevice before it once more resumes its speed, and, escaping from the Kittatiny Range, hurries again toward Delaware Bay, its ultimate reservoir. Perhaps I am not surprisingly accurate in my geography, and I might be worse in my geology; but it would be evident to any eye the least like the late Sir Charles Lyell's, that at some period the earth in this region must have gone through astonishing performances. It must have been a convulsion of no common character which made this great fissure and opened a gate for the water, piling up the mountains, Minsi upon the Pennsylvania side and Tammany on the New-Jersey side, each 1,600 feet high, while the minor Blockade Mountain, about 600 feet high, gives the river a graceful curve. Minsi and Blockade Mountains stand, as the Promised Land did, all clothed in living green, but Tammany rises in unabashed and granite nakedness. These mountains are not Alpine in their elevation, but for one ambitions of exploits in climbing, they offer excellent facilities so far as they go. Mount Minsi has witnessed my inexperienced and valetudinarian efforts. The Water Gap has many devoted admirers, who every summer come to it for rest and recreation, and some of these have formed an association called "The Minsi Pioneers," the laudible purpose of which is to develop the beauties and attractions of the mountain whose name they bear. To this society the visitor is indebted for "The True Ridge Path," a regree year of the captain. After some trouble the vessel was backed Path," a narrow road or pathway running around Mount Minsi. This was really an enterprising piece of engineering. The trees have been removed, great boulders blasted, the thickets broken up, bridges constructed, places of rest planted. Really, in my physical condition, it was something of an exploit to achieve the ascents and descents of the True Ridge Path. I was in a manner betrayed into it by my companions, who, being women, and young women, were anxious to do the deed themselves, and who promised to see me safely around-a pledge which, with much laughing on their part and much sprawling upon mine, they honorably fulfilled. The Ridge Path, doubtless, would be child's play and a flat level to those who have scramble among the Alps; but I found it highly precipitous and exhausting. Sometimes it was necessary to pull me up. Sometimes it was necessary to let me gently down. Occasionally the ascent was so steep that I, breathless and perspiring, pronounced it impossible, and solemn', if not piteously, declared that I would go no further. But then to go back or downward was quite as bad as to go forward or upward. There were ugly ravines into which no man with a proper respect for his bones would desire to fall. I do not suppose that there was much actual danger, but occasionally the outlook, or uplook, to me was rather discouraging. Yet there was at frequent points such glimpses of superb natural scenery as repaid all the fatiguing exertion, and wher we reached Prospect Rock the view was one which my lowland eyes never before witnessed. It was a positive pleasure to recover one's breath; it was another pleasure to drink water, pure and sparkling, from its natural fountain. Before our eyes all the beauties of this charming spot for miles extendedriver and hill, hamlet and hotel, wood and valleywe looked down upon them all, while twenty miles away rose the blue Pocono Mountains. It was worth while to come all the way from New-York to get such a sense of elevation. I was tired, but I was enchanted. I forgot all my ignominious protests against going on, while now that the way was easy I experienced a different reluctance, and was equally fain to stay when I was. But it was now nearly dinner time, and with my reviving appetite a dinner at the Gap House was not to be disregarded. I had achieved the True

It is a great thing when the air which we breathe s an absolute luxury. When it is decently good, tolerably free from what is unpleasant and enervat ing or worse, we take no note of it, inhaling it as a matter of course and thinking nothing of anything better. But the air of the Water Gap is like pure food or a fine wine. It is, if I may say so, a presence. You pay attention to your respiration and discover that you have a new sense. You feel as the birds may be supposed to feel far above roofs and pires, wheeling about in pure other, and away from all terrestrial contaminations. You wonder if this is your poor old body, which only yesterday you were dragging up and down the New-York avenues, with limbs refusing to do cheerfully their office, with your lungs full of furnace heat, and with brain half fricasseed. From top to toe you are filled with a delicious coolness. You could do doughty and gigantic deeds, only you prefer to remain in ment. But Mr. Brodhead's piazza had also its charms; after labor repose is sweet, especially repose in an arm-chair with a cool breeze blowing who has put a girdle about Mount Minsi, with the additional prospect of an excellent dinner, for which, the reader may be sure, appetite will not be want-

It was not exactly laziness; it was not the dreamy

COMFORTS AT THE HOTELS-A PLACE FOR ROMPsluggishness of Thomson's Castle of Indolence; it was not the dissolution of Tennyson's Lotos Eaters; but rather a sense of reserved strength, with DELAWARE WATER GAP, Penn., July 27 .- It is no present inclination to bring it into requisition. You could, an' you would; but you did not choose to. Emerson's words in "Nature" came into my mind: "Almost I fear to think how glad I am." Yet it was a quiet gladness. The senses were taking their holiday. Eye and ear had come for a vacation, the brain and weary finger for a furlough; and lo! there was a revelation that there was work in rest, and accomplishment possible without running about, and an excitence worth having, with This is the abstract side of my Water Gap visit.

My readers will thank me more heartily, perhaps, for some notice of a different sort of creature comfort. It is pleasant to find that while nature has done her part man has done his to make this retreat almost faultless. A bad hotel would spoil all. Nobody can enjoy scenery when driven to growl about his dinner. Mr. Brodhead's Water Gap House, which I believe has already been favorably noticed in THE TRIBUNE, is to me a sort of miracle, Perched upon the top of Sunset Hill, you might think it, to use Sidney Smith's phrase, "fifty miles from a lemon"; and yet it would be hard to find a better house in all New-York. Some things, of course, are to be had anywhere with a little caregood beds, for instance, and civil treatment; but Mr. Brodhead has contrived to create what is usually called "a first-class hotel" in the wilderness; he also contrives to maintain it there, with a cook who is an artist, and with all upon whom you depend for comfort and convenience, willing, obliging and intelligent. There is no crowding, no jostling, no growling, no bustle. The two or three hundred guests have ample elbow room, and one may make new acquaintances or not as he pleases. There is a little dancing in the dining-room once or twice a week, but it is composed mostly of the young folks; the older and wiser ones evidently have not come to the Water Gap to dance. We know all of the faroff outside world which we care to know. The New-York morning newspapers we have by noon; and there are two mails a day by which we may keep en rapport with business or family or friends. But for this, we might as well (and very well it is) be in the Happy Valley of Rasselas. So we read novels and chat and dream waking dreams, and sleep dreamlessly all night; so we get up every morning with a feeling that life is worth living, and with a conviction that "all work and no play" is good neither for Jack nor for ourselves.

There must be, I suppose, a great many people at the Water Gap, for there are a good many hotels besides our own. But there is, as I have said, no sense of crowding. Absolute solitude is to be had, by those who like it, almost within a stone's throw of those hundred human beings. Perfect rest is within reach of all. There is nothing to irritate or annoy. There is silence, if silence be desirable, and chat for those who relish it. So it is not strange that these who once visit the Water Gap come again and again. They may already begin to feel that it belongs to them; but that is a harmless delusion. The railway will carry anybody there, and the Water Gap House is a very commodious structure.

After passing through the draw of the bridge speed was increased and the vessel darted swiftly bridge speed was increased and the vessel darted swiftly through the waters of Sandy Hook Bay. The elerical passenger began walking up and down the deek of the yacht with his hands clasped behind his back, evidently "making up a sermon," keeping one eye on his umbrells and the other on his gripsack, while the other passengers set-tled themselves for a cosey chat. On the right stretched the white beach of Sandy Hook, and on the other the wooded heights of the Navesink. On the top of the hill, the highest piece of coast land between the pine forests of Maine and the mossy glades of Florida, were the two Government lighthouses, connected by a long brown stone building. The passengers were delighted with the few minutes the yacht reached the pier of the Atlantic Highlands Association. ## EUROPEAN GRAIN CROPS

UNFAVORABLE WEATHER IN SOME PLACES-DE-PENDENCE ON AMERICA.

Washington, July 27.-Consul Duboise, of Aix-la-Chapelle, reports to the Department of State, under date of May 27, that the oat crops in the mountainone regions (the principal staple of the inhabitants) are in a thourishing condition; but in the lowlands vegetation is extremely backward. The crops generally, but more particularly those of wheat and rye, have suffered from this severe weather. Rye is very small and will develop very unsatisfactorily, and if there be not a copious rainfall at an early date the farmers will only realize one half, and in some places one-third of their wheat crops. Formerly rye was the poor man's daily bread, but last year, for the first time in the history of Germany, it was cheaper to eat pure wheat bread. This was brought about by the enermous importation of American wheat. Up to 1879 the cost of wheat was 25 per cent highe than that of rye, but last year any slight difference ex than that of rye, but last year any slight difference existing was in favor of wheat. The average prices range at prosent as follows: Wheat, first quality, per 100 kilos, $5 47; second quality ditto, per 100 kilos, $5 23. Rye, first quality, per 100 kilos, $5 39; second ditto, $5 15. Oats, per 100 kilos, $3 88. Thus, it may be seen that, through the great productive power of America, pure wheat bread which two years ago was considered a luxury in the homes of the German laborer, has now become an article of every-day food.

The latest information from Holland shows that hundreds of acres of wheat have become worthless from the effect of the unfavorable weather and have been ploughed up and sown with eats and barley. Altogether the farmers in this country have a most unpromising outlook, but the consumers are unconcerned, for American wheat is abundant and 15 per cent obesper than the home out the consumers are unconcerned, for American wis abundant and 15 per cent cheaper than the boroduct. So that at least there is no danger of famin

PROTECTING AMERICAN CITIZENS.

IBY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNG. Washington, July 27.-The State Department is making vigorous efforts to secure the release of naturalized American citizens held in European countries for military service. William Brink, of South Manchester, Conn., a German, who came to this country some years ago and became a naturalized citizen, returned to Fatherland this summer and was seized by the authorities and given the alternative of going into the army or to jail. He chose the latter and appealed to the American Minister for protection. His friends in Connecticut have furnished to the State Department ample evidence of Mr. Brink's American citizenship; and Minister White has been telegraphed to use every effort to secure his discharge from custody. It is believed that by this time Mr. Brink has been set at

TRYING TO BOARD A MOVING TRAIN.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE THIRD AVENUE ELEVATED ROAD.

As a north-bound train on the Third Avenue Elevated Railroad was beginning to move away from the Fourteenth Street Station shortly after six p. m. yesterday, a man dressed in a blue-flannel suit threw a ticket into the gateman's box and made a dash for the train. The rear car was pass ing him at the time, and the gate of the car was closed, but he ran to the car and caught hold of the gate. He was unable to get upon the car, but clung to the gate while the train went forward with constantly increasing speed. At the northern end of the station platform the man was caught by the iron railing. He struck the railing so violently that it was broken, and he fell headlong upon the street pavement below. His right arm was dislocated, his skull was fractured and several of his ribs were skull was fractured and several of his ribs were broken, while blood streamed from some nely cuts on his face. The police found him insensible. He was removed in an ambulance to the New-York Hospital, where he died at 9:30 p. m., without regaining consciousness. He was about forty-five years old, short and stout, with gray hair and sandy mustache. In the pockets of his clothing were found a small sum of money, a note-book and some letters addressed to "Frank Tobey, No. 47 University-place." One of the letters was written by his sister, Mrs. Charles J. Barclay, at the Portsmouth Navy Yard. 1t was ascertained that the dead man was Francis Tobey, a clerk at No. 47 University-place. He was unmarried, and boarded at No. 500 Third-ave.

PASSING WORTHLESS CHECKS.

A warrant was secured for the arrest of William T. Phipps on July 2, from Justice Walsh, in Brooklyn, upon a charge of passing a check on W. C. Wilson, of No 465 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, the check being for $50 in the Shoe and Leather Bank, in which Mr. Phipps had no money and nover had an account. The warrant was intrusted to Detective Corr. Phipps went to Wilson's office after banking hours, represented that he needed the after banking hours, represented that he needed the money and persuaded Wilson to accommodate him. Detective Corr succeeded in learning that Mr. Phipps was an insurance agent, with offices at No. 170 Montague st., Brooklyn, and No. 235 Broadway, in this city. Unable to find him in Brooklyn, he got Policeman Dougherty, of the Brooklyn squad, to look out for him in this city, and the latter managed to arrest him yesterday. Phipps was taken to the Headquarters in Mulberry-st., and information given to the Brooklyn police. Detective Chambers took the prisoner to Brooklyn, and he was locked up in the Washington Street Police Station. It appears that Phipps was formerly an officer, with a salary of Washington Street Police Station. It appears that Phipps was formerly an officer, with a salary of $5,000 a year, of the Globe Life Insurance Company, now defunct, the affairs of which gained much notoriety a few years ago. Since this company passed out of existence Mr. Phipps has been an insurance agent and has had part in several questionable transactions. He recently passed a bogus check for $30 or W. S. Carlisle, a grocer, at Fulton and Bridge-sts., Brooklyn, but the matter has been settled and no complaint is made.

ANOTHER GIFT FROM GEORGE L. SENEY.

In addition to his recent generous gifts to the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn., George I. Seney, of Brooklyn, has given $100,000 to the College for the purpose of founding scholarships for meritorious students. The income of the amount is to be annually applied as follows:

At the end of the next freshman year fifteen competitive scholarships, from $100 gradually ascending to $250, will be awarded in the order of preficiency, according to conditions to be hereafter annually assembly according to conditions to be hereafter annually assembly according to conditions to be hereafter annually assembly as a superior of the second section of the second second

At the end of each sophomore, junior and senior year, seven competitive scholarships of similar amounts will be awarded, the whole beginning with the next class, so that after the fund is in full operations of the competitive scholarships from ation, thirty-six competitive scholarships fre $100 to $250 will be annually awarded to the

ESCAPE OF PEISONERS FROM JAIL.

Three prisoners escaped from the new jail at Riverhead, Suffolk County, Long Island, Tuesday night. They were Frederick Vinton, confined on a charge of burglary with violence; Patrick Sullivan. charged with stabbing, and a man who was held as a witness against Sullivan. They secured their freedom by sawing through one of the iron bars which guarded a window. The discovery of the flight of the prisoners was made yesterday morning. Up to a late hour last evening they had not been recaptured.
